

Breakthrough for jobseekers

SARINA Russo Job Access has introduced new training programs to help workers in many industries get through in a tough job market.

Chief executive officer Kevin Ayre said programs in customer service, retailing, office administration and hospitality had been developed to give jobseekers an edge when looking for work.

"It's vitally important to tailor programs to meet the needs of both jobseekers and employers and deliver that training where people need it," Mr Ayre said.

He said employers benefited from using the company's services.

Job Access pre-screened people to the specific requirements of an employer.

"We give employers advice and access to Government incentives including incentives for apprenticeships and traineeships," Mr Ayers said.

"There are also opportunities for employers to 'upskill' their current workforce with financial assistance from the Commonwealth Government," he said.

Mr Ayers said the greatest issue facing jobseekers was increasing competitiveness for jobs.

EMPLOYMENT

Log on to careerone.com.au to search:

1222 trades and services jobs

777 sales jobs

682 engineering jobs

456 hospitality and tourism jobs

387 retail jobs

289 education and childcare jobs

345 administration jobs

Work options . . . Sarina Russo Job Access chief executive officer Kevin Ayre chats with a jobseeker