

Delivering jobs and training

THIRTY years ago Sarina Russo established her typing school in Brisbane's CBD with a budget of $600, nine students and two part-time staff.

Today, Ms Russo (pictured) still has her head office in Brisbane and her education, training and recruitment companies now employ nearly 1000 people across the world.

"I'm a proud Queenslander and there is no better feeling than showcasing the expertise and talents of our great state on the world stage," Ms Russo said.

To celebrate her 30th year in business Sarina announced the expansion of her employment services business, Sarina Russo Job Access, into the United Kingdom. Ms Russo said a more entrepreneurial approach to finding work including skills identification, targeted training, employer engagement and jobseeker mentoring will get results for UK jobseekers.

"In our recent Australian contract, Sarina Russo Job Access placed over 130,000 jobseekers with more than 100,000 employers," she said.

"As a company we've always had a point of difference. We always challenged the status quo. We've always thought differently. We've always exceeded the expectation of our clients."

Students, jobseekers and employers have benefited from Sarina Russo's integrated business model which gives them access to a range of specialist education, training, and recruitment businesses.

"If you want to know your future you look at your past and we've helped change the lives of hundreds of thousands of students and jobseekers in the past 30 years and we look forward to delivering our expertise for many decades to come," Ms Russo said.
